Create a List of Emergency Contacts

Renters must not assume that emergency numbers are the same in their new location as they were in their old community. One of the first things to do, for safety's sake, is make a list of emergency contacts and place it on the refrigerator. This list should include emergency and non-emergency police, fire, poison control hotline, the local emergency room location, contact information for next-of-kin, phone numbers for utility providers, service providers, and any other numbers that are need-to-know.
